Liberty Red Edition

Welcome to issue 1 of The Pamphlet. Our inaugural edition “Another Dose of Common Sense” was a smashing success. There were over five hundred physical hand made copies distributed as well as countless digital copies circulated. As of the time of this reading we have gone international. There are readers in Australia, Ireland, Italy, Canada, New Zealand, Belgium and over 218 viewers on our website from 32 States in the U.S. Not bad for a small-town publication.

In this issue we introduce some new writers and new columns. We are still strictly donation based and we would like to urge you to give what you can to ensure that this liberty publication continues.

Liberty Red Edition

Introduction:

In this issue we pay a special tribute to the effort of the fine women of this country. It is an absolute certainty that without them we would not have made it as far as we did. It is also certain that without the strong dedication and absolute patriotism of the current generation of women we will not make it through the difficult times that are facing us.

Here are the articles in this issue.

---

Most of us are not old enough to understand the significance of bright red lipstick in the patriot movement. Those who lived during the World War II, know the patriotic significance of bold red color on the lips.

Adolf Hitler had a particular loathing for women with makeup and especially those with bright red lipstick. He orchestrated the disuse of cosmetics and other items women commonly used at the time. Meanwhile, Allied Nation's ingredient and production facilities transitioned into wartime manufacturing making cosmetics unavailable or incredibly difficult to come by.

Once it became known that Hitler hated makeup, the Lipstick War of World War II was on. Women went through what remained of their cosmetic supplies, melted down the remnants of old lipstick into makeshift molds, and put them into used tubes. The trend became so popular that the U.S.

Marines came out with their own service woman's cosmetic kit featuring their own bold color "Montezuma Red".

For those who want to practice their freedom of speech, then take off the muzzle that is illegally dictated by your tyrant Governor and put on a bright shade of lipstick. Show everyone that you are a fearless patriot.

If you would like to learn more about the important role of women in World War II, I recommend starting with a story published in the Fall of 2007 by Prologue Magazine titled "Wearing Lipstick to war" It is available at the National Archives. There is a link toward the back of The Pamphlet, or you can look it up on the Internet yourself.

Respectfully,

Wade John Taylor

Our next Article is a new writer and fellow veteran who has seen his fair share of trials. We present Musket Master.

MY MOTHER THE WELDER

What do you get when you combine a force of nature, the human Spirit and a group of patriotic people together? You get all the women who came together during World War II to help save the country, commonly called Rosie the Riveter. Most of you have seen the old posters of a young woman with her sleeves rolled up, a bandana on her head, and her right arm curled up showing her muscle. Well, let me introduce you to my mother. She was not Rosie the Riveter; she was my mother the welder. She went to work for a steel company welding bomb casings. I managed to talk with her about it before she passed away. I also received more information from my older brother.

When the men went to war, it left a huge void in manufacturing jobs. Many of the factories switched over to production for the war effort. Here is just a small portion of what the women were required to do: Take care of their children, pay the bills, do the upkeep on the house, keep the car running, cook the meals, do the shopping, and do without most modern conveniences that many women take for granted today - all while going to work for up to 12 hour days while being able to work different shifts. I have probably missed a few things so my apology to those who were affected by the war.

My mother told me that most everyone was on some sort of food rationing and little was to be had for any other items like nylons, make up, or toys for the kids. Milk was unavailable unless you received powdered milk in the food boxes you got from the government. New clothes were almost nonexistent, so you patched what you had then patched the patches. The kids usually got patched up hand-me-downs. So how did these ladies do it?

Women banded together and helped each other out. Those who could not work, watched the kids of those who were at work. They made homemade toys for the kids. You have to keep in mind that there were no TV's, cell phones, or video games. About the only thing left was the radio. Children were taught to use their imagination when playing. They were taught to have respect for and to get along with each other. If they could not do that, they received the board of education across their butt. This taught them that they were held accountable for their actions. This is something that is sorely missed today.

My mother carried out her frugality even after the war. She passed this onto us, her sons. My brother and I are the baby boomers that were taught what respect was, what a patriot is, and to honor God, the flag, and our country. My mom and dad taught us kids how to build a better country. But something went terribly wrong. The next several generations started to turn against what we were taught. My mother and all the other women who helped shape this country during the second world war and afterward are probably turning over in their graves in anguish seeing what this nation has become. Maybe that board of education should have been applied more liberally to our kids.

To all the women who helped save our nation through sacrifice and hard work, along with our fathers that went to war, I salute and honor you for being one of the greatest of generations and to have passed your wisdom on to us.

The preceding articles and this issue were written to introduce our new column that will be a staple in the issues to come. We also introduce a new writer Caty Greene. When she is not busy running her company, homeschooling her children, and keeping her husband, family, and house in order, she has found some time to grace us with her writing. We present two pieces from her today and are thankful that she has volunteered her superior qualities to us. Without further delay, we introduce our new section "Remember the Ladies"

REMEMBER THE LADIES...*SPINNERS

Prior to the Revolutionary War, American women courageously stepped into industry sitting behind a spinning wheel. Boycotting all British goods including ready-to-wear clothing, fabrics and shoes, spinning became a form of rebellion and “homespun” a political weapon. Today we know some of these industrious, independent ladies as the Daughters of the American Revolution.

“If you English folks won’t give us the liberty we ask...I will try to gather a number of ladies armed with spinning wheels (along with men) who shall all learn to weave and keep sheep, and will retire beyond the reach of arbitrary power, clothed with the work of our hands, feeding on what the country affords...In short, we will found a new Arcadia”

~ Charity Clarke

Diary of Anna Green Winslow:
A Boston School Girl of 1771
by Alice Morse Earle

Contrary to what one might assume, spinning was a lost art prior to the war – at least for the “leisure” class. British oppression prompted many ladies to pull spinning wheels from the attic, dust them off and put them to work. Classes were offered, demonstrations held, and bees hosted. Spinning schools opened in Boston. Even wearing a homespun gown was a passive form of rebellion.

“most agreeably manifested in the dress of the Ladies on this occasion, who, to the number of near one hundred, appeared in homespun gowns; a lively and striking instance of their acquiescence and concurrence in whatever may be the true and essential interest of their country. It were to be wished that all assembles of American Ladies would exhibit a like example of public virtue and private economy, so amiably united.”

“Williamsburgh, (in Virginia) January 3,” Boston Gazette (Boston: February 12, 1770)

Not all spinners were part of the uprising. Some women who took part in spinning did not participate as a stand against the Crown, but as a charity for the downtrodden. The boycott of British goods put a unique burden on the poor, sick and widowed. Spinning was a form of service, not just a political statement.

Going into the Revolutionary War, the spinning wheel provided women active participation in political society, while maintaining their female virtue within the confines of the household sphere. Leveraging their domestic power, they planned events and made calculated purchasing choices for the cause of liberty. The legacy of these “spinsters”, female spinners of thread, continues today as the Daughters of the American Revolution...the organization symbolized as the cherished spinning wheel.

Yours most humbly,

Caty Greene

PENOLOPE BAKER EDENTON TEA PARTY

Mainstream historians have been eerily silent when it comes to the Daughters of Liberty. These historians would have one believe that we, the fairer sex, have spent the last two centuries bound to the hearth by our apron strings. This is far from the case. Strong, brilliant, independent women have continually put their mark on this great nation, doing their part to fight for our inalienable rights.

Ten months after the Boston Tea Party, Penelope Barker organized the famous Edenton Tea Party, the first recorded women's political demonstration in America - in fact, in western history.

“Maybe it has only been men who have protested the King up to now. That only means we women have taken too long to let our voices be heard.”

Fifty-one women, from surrounding North Carolina towns and farms, gathered at the home of Elizabeth King, forming the Edenton Ladies Patriotic Guild. Together they drafted and signed an agreement to boycott all British goods as they drank tea made from mulberry leaves, lavender, and other local herbs.

“We the aforesaid Ladys will not promote ye wear of any manufacture from England until such time that all acts which tend to enslave our Native country shall be repealed.”

Unlike the men's Boston Tea Party, the Edenton ladies did not believe in hiding. They made their statement in plain view, signing their real names to their proclamation.

“We are signing our names to a document not hiding ourselves behind costumes like the men in Boston did at their tea party. The British will know who we are.”

Their names published in local and London newspapers; King

George could not ignore the Edenton ladies. The media attacked their reputations, portraying them as bad mothers and loose women. Like their Boston counterparts, these Southern Daughters of Liberty were willing to sacrifice all - their lives, fortunes, and honor, for the cause of freedom.

History has a habit of repeating itself. What are you willing to sacrifice to preserve the system of government we hold dear? Are our God-given inalienable rights worth protecting or are you content with the “security” oppression brings? For the sake of our children and grandchildren, I would argue that it is time for the ladies to speak up and step out just as Penelope Barker did in 1774. Our constitutional republic hangs in the balance. It is up to us to sway the balance in favor of liberty.

Yours most humbly,

Caty Greene

THIS MONTH IN HISTORY

Early in the Revolutionary War the Colonials quickly built a fleet to defend Lake Champlain and prevent the British from using the lake as an invasion point into the Colonies. While General Benedict Arnold lost the battle on October 11th, 1776 and most of the ships were destroyed or captured, the battle was successful in delaying the British from their advance on the upper Hudson River valley.

The Battle of Pell’s point was one of the most significant battles of the Revolutionary War and is seldom talked about in history. It happened on October 18th, 1776 and had we lost it, General George Washington and the main force making up the Continental Army would have been trapped on the island of Manhattan.

On October 26th of 1776, Benjamin Franklin departed for France exactly one month after he was named Ambassador to France. The trip took a month for the seventy-year-old ambassador to complete and would be instrumental in securing a treaty with France.

The Battle of White Plains on October 28th, 1776 ultimately ended in defeat for General George Washington and the Continental Army. The battle did buy time for the battered colonials who were able to evacuate some of their supplies ahead of the orderly retreat of General Washington into New Jersey.

On October, 31st, King George III addressed the British Parliament for the first time concerning the Declaration of Independence and the Revolutionary Leaders who signed it. The King was quick to point out the humiliating defeat of the Continental Army in the Battle of Long Island in August of that year, but also clearly prepared Parliament for another campaign against the Americans and acknowledged that all was not going well for Britain.

Future editions of “This Month in History” will show the timeline starting in October of 1776 and will advance a month in each issue. We hope this snapshot of the Revolutionary War inspires you to read more about the period we cover. The Further Reading section towards the back of The Pamphlet will contain some pointers on where you can find more information on some events.

NATURAL LAW

“The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America, When in the Course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature’s God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.”

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.—That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, — That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.”

The above section of the Declaration of Independence is only about a quarter of the transcription. The rest of the Declaration of Independence goes into some specific grievances that the British Empire had committed against the colonists in America. We will not be addressing those sections in this issue but will instead focus on unalienable rights.

This founding document of the inhabitants of the United States of America, is the single most important document in our history. It defines who we are as a nation. It states clearly that we adhere to the Laws of Nature and that God bestows or entitles us to this law.

What is this Natural Law? Aristotle (384 - 322 BC) had learned about the rudimentary ideas of Natural Law while studying in Plato's Academy for twenty years before forming his own academy. His observation of Greeks in their city-states helped him expand the understanding of Nature's Law and he is considered by many to be the father of Natural Law. His observations are critical to the evolution of the entire western civilized world.

Aristotle defined justice into two spheres. There was justice of nature, which is the higher justice of our creator, and then there was the justice of law which was defined by men. When the laws of men encroached on Natural Law then man had the right to appeal to the higher law of nature which trumped the lower laws of men.

I understand that this is a simplification of Aristotle's observations, but there is a need to put it even more plainly for the purposes of this article.

When a government oppresses people's basic human rights then those people have a right and a responsibility that is afforded to them by their creator to throw off that government and form a new one, so long as that one respects basic human rights. Men are provided this through Providence. Which is Divine power guiding human destiny.

What our founders did in the first paragraph of the Declaration was to invoke Natural Law to secure their basic rights. The second paragraph continues to expand on this by stating some basic understandings of individual sovereignty. We are all created as equal human beings. We are all entitled to liberty, which is another word for autonomy or self-rule. We are all entitled to the pursuit of happiness. This means we can all enjoy the fruits of our own labor in the way we desire without being hindered in our quest or risk having our profits stolen through taxation, theft, or piracy.

We are further reminded that governments only function is to secure these rights and that their existence and authority comes explicitly from the consent of the governed. Should a government become destructive to our natural rights then it is the right of the people to abolish said government and form another that secures those rights.

Our declaration then takes an interesting turn, talking about Prudence or caution. Stating that the longer a government has been in place the more evidence is needed to present your case to the powers that be. That light or temporary causes do not qualify for overthrowing a government. But if a “long train of abuses and usurpations” happen resulting in “Absolute Despotism” then it is our right and our duty to throw off such Government.

For those who state that our Declaration of Independence was an old thought process from people in the 1700’s who did not understand modern times. Keep in mind that our unalienable rights were further defined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights signed in 1948 by the United Nations. This act extended our understanding of Natural Law to our entire planet and has never been rescinded.

What socialists, Marxists, communists, collectivists, and even anarchists are attempting to do is roll back thousands of years of human progression and return us to absolute despotism.

We must defend the absolute rights afforded us by our Creator and outlined in our Declaration of Independence or risk losing our Liberty.

FROM THE EDITOR

HARVEST SEASON

There is a chill in the air in the morning. The long dry summer is over, and the cool rains have descended upon us. The first snowflakes have fallen even if only briefly. The first few doses of frost have put those of us who work the land into overdrive. There is not much time to get the last of our wood in to keep us warm and there is not much time to finish out the harvest and prepare our livestock for winter.

What we have not done by the end of the month to prepare for the long winter ahead, simply will not get done. This applies to our farms as well as our families. Make no mistake, this winter will be unlike any we have ever gone through.

As we speak there are upwards of a hundred cities in this nation that are preparing for civil war. Communist organizations Antifa and Black Lives Matter Inc. have teamed up with anarchists and scores of other hate groups. They are supported by the Socialist Party of America, Democratic Party, Open Society Foundations, ActBlue, and numerous others.

These organizations already own many prosecutors in the cities, ensuring criminals avoid justice as the rebels burn, pillage, extort, and rape the cities until the last bastions of resistance crumbles to them. They did take a week off from the mayhem in the cities to go light forest fires in every corner of the West that they could get to, but they are back to refining their tactics in the cities, conditioning the populace into accepting the coming Color Revolution.

As it becomes increasingly likely that President Trump will win any legitimate election against the incompetent and dementia-stricken Joe Biden, it will become increasingly difficult to keep a lid on the chaos. The death of Supreme Court Justice Ginsberg has raised the stakes for the battle of our Nation as if they were not high enough.

It is likely that our masters will continue to pump fear into the populace over concerns about a virus that has over a 99% recovery rate. They will continue to tell people what they must wear, how far apart they must be, and how many people can gather, all while exempting the rebels who riot that are amongst us. Joseph Goebbels stated “Propaganda works best when those who are being manipulated are confident they are acting on their own free will”, or as he put another way “If you repeat a lie often enough, people will believe it, and you will even come to believe it yourself”.

Most of the last small and medium sized businesses will fall as nonexistent customers and tightening credit lines ensure their demise. It will become increasingly difficult for those who are aware of their awful situation to stock up on food, guns, ammo, medicine, and toilet paper as it gets closer to the main event.

The real kickoff of the color revolution begins on November 3rd, 2020. Everything leading up to the election will be just a chaotic tailgate party. The radical components are already telegraphing that it will appear that President Trump will have won on election day, but that is only because the all the votes were not counted.

Precinct operatives that are under the direction of the revolution will be feverishly forging ballots while the thugs on the streets burn the country down. The talking heads on air and in print will be busy obfuscating the truth while blaming everything that is going wrong on the incumbent.

Transportation and critical infrastructure will quickly disintegrate. While corrupt governors, mayors, and commissioners seize the reins of power all in the name of security. By Thanksgiving most will be without a turkey. By Christmas there will be more blood in the snow than since the last civil war. If that is not bad enough, by January or February most Americans will be without food, electricity, gas, and internet. They will not care who the President is anymore as a large portion of their friends and family will succumb to the chaos.

Rest in peace will be something that many will yearn for.

I do not lay out this future for you to be in fear. Most who hear these words will remain with their head planted firmly in the sand. We all hope that prayers and goodwill will overcome the storm that is coming, but it is best to be prepared.

Now is the time to take stock of your harvest. Make sure you have seeds for the foreseeable future and a stockpile of necessary goods to make it for at least a few months. Talk to your family, friends, and neighbors, to ensure that they are doing all that they can to be prepared as well. After all, they will likely be at your door when they run out of something.

Those with their heads in the sand will soon come. If the current civility levels in our cities is any indication, they are not likely to ask nicely for your stuff.

You may or may not have noticed, but it has become difficult to buy ammunition in any decent quantity and guns have been flying off the shelves in recent months. That means a few things. First, there are plenty of people out there who are just starting to realize that they are going to have to fend for themselves and are not prepared. Second, there are going to be a whole lot of people out there with guns who are likely to do bad things when they get desperate enough.

Now is probably the last call to buff up your armory to ensure that you can not only defend yourself, but hunt for food. Keep in mind that certain things are almost completely sold out. Get what you can if you have nothing. Above all, be prudent with the resources that you have. Come up with a list of everything you need and prioritize it so that you can get the most important things first.

Lastly, a little advice for those who are new to the rural communities after having escaped the chaos of the cities.

The people out here are a resilient stock who are used to the long cold winters that we normally deal with. We have dealt with wolves, bears, mountain lions, and plenty of nutjobs from the city who think they can move up here and change things. You have probably noticed that you cannot get a cell phone signal in most parts of the county. You can expect power outages and internet outages quite frequently especially in the winter. Quite a few of the locals communicate via Amateur Radio. If you are looking for a free class email me and I will forward your contact information to a local teacher. There is also CB and FRS radio, although those are not as effective for getting help if you need it. Landlines are a must. Even when service goes out to the outside world, they still work locally and you can make a phone call in the dark if you have an older model that does not require power.

Yes, it seems like this is the land that time left behind. We like it that way. The challenges of living a hard life keep the riff raff out. When you go to the dump and try to pay with a visa card you will be politely informed, "We don't use them fancy things around here". That is just how it is. Some places will accept cards, but if you pay cash you may get a discount. Local checks are usually still accepted in most places for those of you that know what a checkbook is.

We are a decent people who know how to shoot straight and look after our own. If you are of good stock and are likeminded, then you will probably survive out here. If you are not prepared and not willing to endure the feet of snow and twenty below, you most likely will not survive. It's a good place to live. Just don't go and try changing it to the place that you left behind.

~Wade John Taylor

PATRIOT OPINION

---

I was reluctant to get into a direct opinion section in The Pamphlet, but there has been a desire by some to have their opinions heard in our publication. The following opinions are not to be taken as the view of “The Pamphlet”. They are solely the views of those who wrote them and may or may not be based on facts. If you would like to submit your opinion please email it to me Editor@ThePamphlet.Net.

CHOICES

Having a choice is always a good idea and in this great nation of ours we still have choices. You can choose what party you want to join, what gun to buy, what kind of car to drive, who you want to worship as your god of choice, what school you want to go to, if you want to wear a mask or not and many other choices. I was recently listening to Joe Biden and what he wants to change if he becomes president. He said on one interview he will outlaw all assault weapons like the AR14 and on another interview he said like the AR16. The only one he left out was the AR15 - which is good because there is no AR14 or 16. On another interview he said he wants to outlaw fracking and oil pumps by the year 2024. If I do the math right, that's only 4 more years. He also wants to get rid of all gas and diesel vehicles as part of the Green New Deal. I wonder if we get a choice of what color our new electric vehicle will be. You will also not have a choice of what school you will go to because they will all be government run and the teaching will all be government propaganda. Private and Christian schools will be shut down. Just the other night he said Covid masks will be mandatory for the whole nation if he becomes president. Now think about this: Kamala Harris claims to be black, but is not because her dad is Jamaican and her mom, I believe, is east Indian. When you want power so badly I guess you will say anything. I say this because I doubt Sleepy Joe will last a year. Then guess who will be the next president? She is further to the left than Biden. The choice is yours when you vote: Joe Biden, who wants to change our Constitution, take away our freedoms and basically create a socialist/communist country; or Donald Trump, who wants to make America great again with more choices. One thing you may want to consider when making choices is that there is always consequences, good or bad, depending on your choice. It only takes a few good men to do nothing (as in not voting) to lose an election. The choice is yours.

PATRIOT REFLECTION

This Issues Patriot Reflection was submitted by Elizabeth Taylor.

A Visitor From The Past

By Thelen Paulk

I had a dream the other night, I didn't understand.

A figure walking through the mist, with flintlock in his hand.

His clothes were torn and dirty, as he stood there by my bed

He took off his three-cornered, and speaking low he said:

"We fought a revolution to secure our liberty.

We wrote the Constitution, as a shield from tyranny.

For future generations, this legacy we gave,

In this the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

"The freedom we secured for you, we hoped you'd always keep,

But tyrants labored endlessly
while your parents slept,

Your freedom gone, your courage lost, you're no more than a slave,

In this the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

"You buy permits to travel, and permits to own a gun,

Permits to start a business, or build a place for one.

On land you believe you own,
you pay a yearly rent.

Although you have no voice in how the money's spent."

"Your children must attend a school that doesn't educate.

Your Christian values can't be taught, according to the State.

You read about the current news,
in a regulated press.

You pay a tax you do not owe, to please the IRS."

"Your money is no longer made of Silver or of Gold.

You trade your wealth for paper,
so your life can be controlled.

You pay for crimes that make our nation, turn from God in shame.

You've taken Satan's number, as you traded in your name."

You've given government control of those who do you harm,

So they can padlock churches and steal the family farm.

And keep our country deep in debt, put men of God in jail,

Harass your fellow countrymen, while corrupted courts prevail."

"Your public servants don't uphold the solemn oath they've sworn.

Your daughters visit doctors, so their children won't be born.

Your leaders ship artillery, and guns to foreign shores,

And send your sons to slaughter, fighting other people's wars."

"Can you regain the freedom for which we fought and died?

Or don't you have the courage, or the faith to stand with pride?

Are there no more values for which you'll fight to save?

Or do you wish your children to live in fear and be a slave?"

People of the Republic, arise and take a stand!

Defend the Constitution, the Supreme law of the land!

Preserve our Great Republic, and God-Given Right!

And pray to God to keep the torch of Freedom burning bright!"

As I awoke he vanished, in the mist from whence he came.

His words were true, we are not Free, we have ourselves to blame.

For even now as tyrants, trample
each God-Given Right,

We only watch and tremble, too afraid to stand and fight.

If he stands by your bedside, in a dream, while you sleep,

And wonders what remains of our Rights he fought to keep,

What would be your answer, if he called out from the grave:

"Is this still the land of the free and the home of the brave?"

Liberty Red Edition

Pamphlets that were widely distributed during the founding of our Republic were instrumental in securing our inalienable rights from the tyrannical rule of the day. The most popular, “Common Sense” written by Thomas Paine in 1775-1776 is still well worth a read.

Through these pamphlets the soul of our new nation and the protection of our God given rights was born. Our Divine Creator inspired the great men of that day to ensure no government takes away those freedoms by enshrining them in our founding documents.

Nowadays oppressive and corrupt politicians, judges, and bureaucrats have teamed up with diabolical corporations and media outlets to subjugate the population. They openly support racist Marxist communist organizations. They declare that their goal is the destruction of churches, cultural institutions, private businesses, and ultimately The United States of America.

That same tyranny we the people overthrew two hundred and forty-four years ago is rampant again. The Pamphlet has been resuscitated from the dust to spread the word. We are rallying true patriots and freedom loving people everywhere to take up the banner of liberty. We are common people just like you.

This land is our land. We will not go quietly into the night and fade away. We are here to stay. Live free or die.
